

Ghada Amer

Jordan

Graduate

Harvard University

Born and raised in Jordan, Ghada graduated from Harvard University with an A.B in Government and a Secondary in Studies of Women, Gender and Sexuality. She completed her Honors Thesis entitled: “The Missing Link: Theorizing the Impact of First Ladies on Authoritarian Regime Stability in the Arab World.” Currently, Ghada is working as a Legal Analyst at Kobre & Kim LLP in Washington, DC.

In continuing her dedication to ensuring access to justice for all, Ghada has previously worked at the Massachusetts State House with the Equal Justice Coalition. Prior to that, Ghada has worked with the International Bridges to Justice in Geneva, the International Criminal Court in The Hague and the Clinton Foundation in New York. All these experiences have deepened her passion for politics, human rights, and legal work.

At Harvard, Ghada was the founder of the Political Action and Advocacy Committee, a chair on the board of the Society of Arab Students and a Social Impact Fellow. In combining her passion for the law and art, Ghada served as the Art Editor of the Harvard Human Rights Review.

She is also passionate about soccer; she was her school’s Varsity Captain and a member of the Jordanian Women’s National Soccer team.
